THE WAY MISERS GROW .- Of riches it is written, "There is no good in them but for a man to rejoice and to do good in his life."-Let money-grabbers remember that. If men absorb their property; it parches the heart so that it will not give forth blossoms and fruits, but only thorns and thistles. If men the prosperity which shines upon themselves, wealth is not only harmless, but full of advantage. But the throughfares of wealth are search of a crowded by a throng who jostle, and thrust, and conflict, like men in the tumult of a battle. The rules which crafty old men breathe into the ears of the young are full of selfish wisdom:-teaching them that the chief end of man is to harvest, to husband; and to ence; a scale which has penury for one extreme, and parsimony for the other; and the virtues are ranked between them as they are part the following patterns: relatively fruitful in physical thrift. Every crevice of the heart is caulked with costive maxims, so that no precious drop of wealth may leak out through inadvertent generosities. Indeed, generosity and all its compa- ISLAND QUEEN. my are thought to be little better than pilfering picklocks, against whose wiles the heart is prepared, like a coin-vault, with iron-denched walls of stone, and impenetrable doors .-

The habits of regarding men as dishonest rivals also dries up the kindlier feelings .-A shrewd trafficker must watch his fellows. he suspicious of their preffers, vigilant of their movements, and jealous of their pledges. The world's way is a very crooked way, and a very guileful one. Its travellers creep by stealth or walk craftily, or glide in conceal ments, or appear in specious guises. He who advantage from their hands, or to lose it by and dispatch, at their wiles comes at length to regard all men as either enemies or instruments. Of course he thinks it fair to strip his enemy: and just as fair to use an instrument. Men are no more to him than bales, boxes or goods mere matters of traffic.
